

Statement New Ulm District meeting

September 23, 2021

I am Julie Quist with the Child Protection League, a Minnesota nonprofit that defends children against exploitation, indoctrination, and violence.

Thank you for allowing me a few minutes to speak about the fundamental shift you're taking in the name of Equity. Equity isn't a curriculum. It's a worldview. It interprets the world and all of history through the lens of racial power. Under Equity, we judge people by their racial and identity groups, not by their individual character and work. This is a radical political ideology that undermines the principles of our nation: the equality of each individual, endowed by our Creator

Your work sessions included presentations from Ayo Magwood. According to her bio, Ayo's passion is social justice education,¹ that is, education for creating social activists.

Her website is grounded entirely on the idea that all differences in outcomes between racial groups are evidence of racism.

But is race the source of these disparities?

You may have heard of the group Take Charge MN, founded by Kendall Qualls, a black American who grew up in the Harlem public housing projects.

Kendall reminds us that from the early 1900s to the Civil Rights era, the black community was rooted in faith and family, values that survived the horrific generational racism of slavery and segregation.²

In the last five decades, the black family collapsed from approximately 80 percent two-parent families to 80 percent fatherless homes. Federal social programs paid unwed women to have children if they remained unmarried.

Raising children in a marriage is the most effective way to reduce poverty, combat inequality, and develop socially productive children.

Brigid Moriarty-Guerrero, a Senior Consultant for 2Revolutions³, was another of your well-paid consultants. 2Revolutions claims that our education system was intentionally designed to marginalize and suppress minorities.

America, they say, is white supremacist, whites are privileged and complicit, and racism is built into our Republic.⁴ Taxpayers did not hire you to jump on the latest political agenda.

Refocus on academic excellence for all, and respect students as the individuals God created them to be. And I challenge you, invite Kendall Qualls to your next work session.
